Employer-Sponsored Green Card Process

The Employer-Sponsored Green Card is sometimes called the PERM process. It basically allows an employer to sponsor an alien worker for Lawful Permanent Residence (also known as a Green Card.)

This application process is a multi step process.

Step 1: PERM Application- The PERM application is a 2 step process.

The initial step is filing an ETA 9141 for a Prevailing Wage Determination with the US DOL. Once they issue the PWD, then you will need to post a notice in the work place to notify current employees that you are filing a PERM application and place ads in local newspapers.

The second step of the PERM Application is to file an ETA 9089, Application for Permanent Employment Certification for the named beneficiary including information about the job & wage offered. Once the US DOL certifies the ETA 9089, you can move to Step 2.

Step 2: I-140 Immigrant Petition for Alien Workers

This petition is filed by the employer on behalf of the named beneficiary that the employer is sponsoring. Following a review, if the petition is approved, it allows the beneficiary of the petition to file for Adjustment of Status. Approval of this petition does not grant immigrant status or guarantee that the beneficiary will be approved for adjustment of status.

Step 3: I-485 Application to Register Permanent Residence or Adjust Status

The Form I-485 is filed by the named beneficiary of the I-140.

Step 4: Application for Employment Authorization

While the I-485 is pending, the named beneficiary can file an I-765 in order to obtain employment authorization to remain in the US while the I-485 is pending.

ATTORNEY FEES & COSTS

The cost of the PERM process runs several thousand dollars. This is an estimate of the actual costs:
