Structure softened through craft

The X Stool is a refined study in architectural balance, where structure and softness meet in a compact, sculptural form. At its core is a generously rounded upholstered seat cushion, measuring 18 inches in diameter. The cushion features a softly domed top and extends downward into the base, creating a seamless transition between comfort and structure.

Beneath the seat, a sculpted X-shaped base forms four articulated legs, giving the stool a grounded yet dynamic stance. The geometry feels architectural, but never rigid—its proportions carefully calibrated for everyday use.

A steel ring intersects the four legs, serving as a functional footrest while reinforcing the piece's visual rhythm. Available in gunmetal or oil-rubbed bronze, the metal introduces a quiet contrast to the warmth of the wood. Where the ring passes through the legs, the wood is precisely routed, creating a deliberate recess that highlights craftsmanship and material intention rather than surface decoration.

Balanced, tactile, and quietly expressive, the X Stool embodies PARISII philosophy of refined simplicity—where thoughtful construction and material dialogue elevate a familiar form into something enduring and considered.
